Business Description

Research In Motion (RIM) moves with its customers. The company provides wireless hardware, software, and services worldwide. Its BlackBerry smartphones handle mobile voice, e-mail, and text messaging, as well as Internet access and multimedia applications. RIM also makes the Playbook tablet computer, provides software development tools, and makes modems that other manufacturers incorporate into portable devices. In addition to hardware sales, the company generates revenue from network access fees and software licensing fees. RIM sells to wireless carriers, resellers, and corporations. BlackBerry devices are offered by wireless network operators including AT&T Mobility, T-Mobile USA, and Verizon Wireless.

- ☐ A peek at BlackBerry 10; Research In Motion Ltd. will launch its make-or-break BlackBerry 10 phones on Jan. 30, with commercial availability soon after. The phones are crucial to RIM's attempt to stem the huge loss of market share in developed economies and keep its momentum in the world's emerging markets. RIM's senior manager for product marketing, Jeff Gadoway, stopped by The Globe and Mail's Toronto office to show technology reporter Iain Marlow some of the new software on a prototype device.

Hoover's In-Depth Company
Record

MLA, APA, and Chicago/Turabian Style

Professional organizations like the Modern Language Association (MLA), the University of Chicago Press, and the American Psychological Association (APA), establish the documentation standards for most scholarly publishing in the U.S. Sample MLA, APA, and Chicago document types found in LexisNexis® databases. The example citations are shown as if all articles were found in most cases, by removing the web URL part of the citation, the example turns into a citation for a print version. For example, if you cite a Hoover's In-Depth Company Dossier report, there is no print equivalent and you must cite the database itself as your source.

The rules for citing online documents are as changeable as the online publishing environment itself. Find out then select the relevant items from the bibliographic data section found at the top of each html file. Typically 1 you need in your citation.
